

In some ways, I am a poet in a visual medium. Everything is possible when I design with Hangul as separate elements.

When he discovered his talent as a designer, he became who he is today: a typographer obsessed with his language. He founded Ahn Graphics (design firm and multimedia, advertising, and publishing house), and teaches typography at Hong-Ik University. His typofaces regularly appear on posters for national events, and his out-of-frame letters are heavily imitated in all kinds of media. This is because Ahn is the first and only graphic designer; if we have to call him that, who has identified the history and position of Korea's written language.

Ahn's fonts today are used mostly in posters and as headlines. As body text, they stretch the boundaries of legibility.

In this picture we have taken pieces of multiple pictures to make one single unique picture in the end.

GOOGLE

Are you one of the 37 people still unable to access web video on your TV? Then Google has a very cheap solution for you. Chromecast is a dongle that plugs into your TV's HDMI port, so you can view YouTube, Netflix and more using compatible phone apps or the Chrome browser on any device as a remote control. Curiously, you don't actually use your device, but instead use links that run from the cloud, and we're sure it will be used in above-board pursuits...
